

Time-giving Mountain

--An amazing secret place with mountain and sea

--Looking for moving vitality in mine mountain

By Damon

The log-formed road along a cliff in Baohsi (Time-giving) Mountain seems to lead straight to the beach and the mountains. Here you can clearly see the fascinating Jinguashi town, the beautiful Jilung Mountain, the romantic “9 turns plus 18 curves” on the Jinshuei Highway, the Earless Teapot Mountain, the yin-yang sea, and deserted relics of Liukengshuan minefield. The northeastern coastline and the Bitoujiao cape are also just in front. Indeed, from every view angle you can see different cultural and natural landscapes.

During the Japanese occupation period (1895-1945), there was a large air-raid siren. Later on, siren had been given at certain time of a day in addition to real air-raid alarm, and therefore this place was called Baoshi (time-giving) Mountain. But it takes only five to ten minutes to reach an observation platform which can oversee the beautiful mountain and ocean scenery and is a perfect place to view sunrise and sunset. Besides, the most romantic highway in the world is down here. Visitors can enjoy the breeze while watching sea waves, blue ocean and green mountains. These fascinating scenes are all for your enjoyment.

Near the Baoshi mountain there is an old mining train tunnel. I carefully walked through it and saw in front three long ventilation pipelines which no longer function. They look like three pythons crawling around the mountain. Beware that inside the pipelines there still exist hazardous minerals. Tourists are advised not to touch them. The Baoshi Mountain is so changeable that in the evening you can even see fishing boats lights on the sea. It is a fantastic view.
